

I pay for XM Satellite Radio because it offers quality, variety, and features that cannot be found anywhere else. I enjoy XM a great deal and that is why I continue to subscribe. Because XM is a pay service, groups such as the National Association of Broadcasters have no right to determine the services I receive. Millions of subscribers choose to pay for XM Radio for these features just like I do. If the NAB feels threatened they should seek to improve their own services in order to better compete. Petitioning the FCC out of fear of competition is ludicrous. The fact that so many are willing to pay for radio in exchange for better service should not come as a surprise, and it's up to the NAB to either make changes or not. Attacking Satellite Radio and attempting to rob paying customers is just completely wrong.

William Fink